CHRISTMAS NOVELTIES

(Reprinted from the "SUFFOLK CHRONICLE," December 8th, 1894.)

"Searchers after the beautiful (and, surely, with the season of 'Goodwill towards men' so closely upon us their name is legion), in the shape of pretty gifts wherewith to express one's kind thoughts, should not fail to pay a visit to Messrs. Fraser's pretty 'Liberty' rooms, on the first floor. 'Our true intent is all for your delight' must assuredly be this firm's motto, for they have filled these rooms with the choicest works of art, and, not only do they choose lavishly and well, but they place the goods offered for sale in such exquisite setting that every article seems to possess a decided cachet of its own, which places it quite beyond the pale of everyday trifles. A fairyland of wealth is revealed as one reaches the top of the easy staircase. We seem to leave the bustling, occupied, money-making world behind, and enter a domain where beauty reigns supreme—beauty which appeals to the senses in the artistically subdued light, lovely colours, exquisite forms that surround, and the perfume-laden air one breathes. Certainly no one who claims to possess good taste can fail to find something to suit. Is the present for a lady proud of her home? What 'hausfrau,' worthy of the name, would not be delighted with a Cairo folding stand and tray, or with one of those quaintly inlaid coffee stools (from far Damascus) on which to stand a pot and pan? If already the possessor of these, then a gorgeously embroidered screen from victorious Japan. Or last, though by no means least, one can fall back on the familiar tea cosy, but so daintily ruched, frilled, puffed, and perfumed, as to be familiar no longer. Is it for a sister, or, perchance, for someone else's sister? Then the dainty little draped cotton basket, the finely wrought handkerchief sachet, the sweet-smelling sandal wood glove box, the beautifully enamelled bon-bon box, or the useful and decorative bottles of scent can be called into requisition. Is it for the aged mother or friend? What more appreciated than the soft down cushion on which to rest the poor tired head? Here they are galore—also frilled, puffed, and perfumed—in every lovely fabric under the sun. Even 'poor man' is not forgotten, for here is something out of the common—an artistic waste-paper basket, not beribboned, but a substantial and useful structure lined inside and out with real gold leaf, which in combination with the cane-work gives a handsome effect. Nor must the green 'Cluthe' glass flower vases, indispensable to the well furnished dinner table, or the quaintly shaped 'Dunmore' pottery, be forgotten. A word of praise is due to Messrs. Fraser's collection of carved oak, to be seen in many pretty shapes. Let the visitor not forget to peep into the next room, which is filled with novel pieces of green stained oak that make one quite envious and set one longing to turn out one's 'friends of the past' and make room for the new, charming, and deserving stranger. We scarcely like to connect such beautiful things as these with the vulgar question of pounds, shillings, or pence, but even the most impecunious amongst us need not hesitate to become a buyer, for the most dainty of trifles can be acquired for the absurd sum of a shilling or so, and the quaintest chair or coffee stool for about half a guinea."

EADE'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS.
I WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT THEM IF THEY COST ONE POUND A BOTTLE.
"16, Burton Crescent, "Dewsbury Road, Leeds.
"May 2nd, 1894.
"Dear Sir,—It is with unbounded pleasure I send you a few lines in praise of your most excellent Pills. It is six years since I first had Rheumatic Gout, and I had three months in bed with it. Of course I had the doctor, and he sweated me down almost to a skeleton. The next spring I had another attack, and was persuaded by a friend to try your Pills. I did so, and am quite sure they prevented my being laid up again. Ever since then I have had the Pills, have taken two or three Pills, and have been all right again directly.
I WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT THEM IF THEY COST ONE POUND A BOTTLE.
You are quite at liberty to make what use you like of this, and I shall be pleased to answer any poor sufferer who cares to write me (enclosing stamped address). Wishing you every success.
"Yours truly,
"ALBERT MOUNTAIN."

A TRAGIC MYSTERY.

FROM THE DIARY OF INSPECTOR BYRNES.

JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE END OF A CLUE.

That same evening, at an earlier hour, the Shambling Man had called at the Central Office, and been admitted to a private interview with Inspector Byrnes.

The inspector judged from his face that he had brought some news with him.

"What is it about this time?" he inquired with a smile. "Have you cleared up Colonel Desmond, or have you identified the pawn-ticket forger, or both?"

"I think I have got what will bring us to the end of this business," replied the other, producing his note-book from his pocket, and referring to it as occasionally as he spoke. "The first object was to find out about the ticket forgery. I went up to Sibley's and asked them whether they remembered a valuable cigarette case in the office at about the time when the silver cigarette case was pawned. They got out the books and memoranda, and we all three turned them over carefully. The number of the ticket given for the cigarette case was 983. The number just before that, 982, was published in the other number—984—was for a silver watch. One of those two must have been given to the man we were after. The reverend had been pledged by a man named Carl Schnabel: he was known at the shop, having been there several times before. He was an actor in one of the small German theatres, and was not likely to have undertaken such a job. Besides, he must have entered the shop and transacted his business before the man with the cigarette case came in; and it was not probable that he could have stayed around afterward long enough to discover what the next customer was doing. Accordingly Sibley, who had attended him, was positive that he had left as soon as he got his money.

"It was No. 984, then, was it?" said the inspector.

"That conclusion seemed inevitable. The name of this man, as recorded in the books, was Robertson—Mr. Robertson, and the address as 1280, Broadway. Neither Sibley nor the clerk, Isaac, could remember anything about the man at the moment, but they both try and recall him to mind, and meanwhile I made a trip to 1280, Broadway: and found, as I expected, that no person of that name had been there.

"I came back to Sibley's; and this time the clerk, Isaac, thought he recollected something. He said that Sibley had attended to the cigarette case (he was already there), and that in fact that transaction was going on that the fellow calling himself Robertson had come in. Sibley differed with him on that point: he thought that no one else had been in the shop at the time he was examining the cigarette case. But he may easily have been mistaken on that point; he had obtained a good deal impressed by the appearance and behaviour of his customer, and would be apt not to notice anything going on at the moment. Isaac's evidence was positive, and carried the greater weight. I asked him to describe his man, and he said that he was young, and had a fresh complexion; could not remember whether his face was clean-shaven or not; had noticed something peculiar in his speech—a foreign accent, not German, nor French; but he did not speak his words the way an American would. It wasn't Irish, either. It occurred to me that it might be English, if I spoke a few sentences in the English style; and Isaac said he thought that was more like it."

"A fair-complexioned young Englishman? Robert Johnson would answer that description well enough," observed the inspector, thoughtfully.

"That is just what struck me!" cried the Shambling Man, with a gratified air. "And then another idea came to me; there had been something familiar all along in the name—John Robertson. All at once I said to myself, 'It's Robert Johnson, of course, with the John and Robert transposed.' That sort of pseudonym he would be likely to adopt at a moment's warning." I felt certain, then, that I was on the right track."

"However, I hadn't proved it yet. I went straight over to Jersey City, found Johnson's lodgings, and asked to see him. The landlady said he was at his business in New York, and wouldn't be out till late. I chatted with her about him, and she gave him an excellent character. I asked whether he came home regularly every evening, and she said he did, as a general thing; he had occasionally stayed away a few nights at a time, but not often. 'Holidays, and that sort of thing, I suppose?' I said. She answered that the longest time she remembered of his being absent was about New Year's: he had gone to town on Friday, and hadn't come out till the following Monday night. Well, that just covers the period of the murder, and the pawning of the cigarette case!"

The inspector nodded approvingly. "That will take the wind out of his sails, if he should want to establish one," he observed.

"Yes! but I wasn't through with him yet. It was one o'clock in the afternoon when I got down to Jersey City Ferry. I telegraphed to Boston then for Isaac to meet me at the Astor House, at two. He was on hand, and we went together to the Printing and Engraving Company's building. I got permission to walk through, with my friend, to see how things were managed. I told him, if he saw anybody like John Robertson, to let me know it.

"Nothing happened until we got into the pressroom. I looked about, and saw Johnson talking to the foreman. I made no sign; but after awhile Isaac looked over there, and as quick as he set eyes on the man, he touched my arm. 'That's him!' he said. 'That's the fellow that pawned the silver watch! I'd know him anywhere!'"

"Good!" said the inspector. "You managed that cleverly. There seems to be little doubt but Johnson was the man who forged the ticket. But how do you account for his having done so? What could have been his object?"

"Well, I reason this way," replied the Shambling Man. "Johnson must be the enemy of Colonel Desmond, and he must, at the same time, be acting as if he were his friend. The colonel has no suspicions of him, and yet he has evidently been working against the colonel. He came from England less than a year ago, and got a position in the colonel's office. That looks as if he may have come over, or been sent over, with designs against him. Now, the colonel is an Irishman, and some of his proceedings are a little mysterious. When I was at the French ball the other night, the cabman, McBride, put me on the track of him, and I followed him about. He wore a red domino, and there were four or five others dressed much in the same way. I saw him exchange signals with these persons, and finally they all met together behind the scenes. I managed to get near enough to hear a part of their conversation. The other men were all Irishmen, and from what I could gather, they were talking about England, and about some documents and transactions that puzzled me—but it was something astonishing about the murder. All at once it seemed to me that they might be members of some secret organisation—and what more likely than Irishmen, what could it be but a Fenian organisation?"

"Humph! There might be something in that notion!" remarked the inspector. "Well?"

"Well, just then there was an accident; one of the flats broke down, and the crowd scattered. I could learn nothing more, but I kept thinking about it, and my idea is this: Robert Johnson is——"

At this point the Shambling Man was interrupted by a knock at the door. A sergeant came in and whispered to the inspector, whose face expressed surprise. "Bring him in here," he said to the sergeant; and, turning to the Shambling Man, he added, "Here is Robert Johnson himself!"

In fact, that gentleman entered a moment later, and greeted the chief of detectives respectfully.

"I have some information to give you, inspector," he said; "it concerns myself, and some other persons as well; and I have reason to think that it may be of service to you. Shall I speak before this gentleman? indicating the Shambling Man.

"Yes," the inspector replied. "He probably knows more about you than I do, already."

"I have been in a very painful, a very good deal," returned the other, "and to tell you the truth, that is the reason I am here. I am aware that I have been shadowed about the streets of Jersey City, and I am satisfied that, sooner or later, you will find out whatever I might wish to conceal; so I have made up my mind that my safety will be to make a clean breast of it beforehand. Besides, I think I can clear up some misunderstandings, into which I have fallen myself, and which would be apt to perplex you, as well."

With this exordium he told his story, the substance of which we have set down.

He said that his name was really Robert Johnson, and that he was an Englishman. He was an employé of the English Secret Service. (At this, the Shambling Man looked at the inspector, as much as to say that he had already arrived at that conclusion). He had been dispatched to this country for the purpose of watching the movements of Colonel Hugh Desmond, who was believed to be a prominent member of the Fenian Brotherhood. A number of despatches and documents had fallen into the hands of the English Government, and were known to be of Fenian origin; but they were all written in cipher, the key of which was believed to be in the possession of Colonel Desmond. It was Johnson's mission to find out whether this were the case, and, if so, to use every means to obtain the cipher and transmit it to England.

One reason why Johnson had been selected for this enterprise was because he was an expert engraver, and it was known that the colonel was at the head of a printing and engraving business in New York. Thus he would be enabled easily and without suspicion to establish personal relations with the man he was to deal with. Everything fell out as arranged. The colonel and Johnson soon became on good terms, which the latter strengthened by professing a strong sympathy with the Irish cause. Gradually, the colonel admitted him into his confidence. Though never, of course, making any direct violations as to the doings of the Brotherhood, he treated the young man as one who might by-and-bye be himself admitted to it. Johnson, for his part, had already indicated a cordial willingness to do so.

Partly in order to provide himself a foothold in the colonel's private house, and partly on other more obvious accounts, Johnson had brought and more obvious accounts, Johnson had brought about the engagement of Lizzie Pond as companion to Mrs. Desmond. Without letting Lizzie entertain any suspicions as to his real objects or the nature of his employment, he continued to keep himself, by her means, tolerably well informed of everything that went on in the house. He convinced himself that Mrs. Desmond was not privy to the colonel's proceedings. She was simply a beautiful woman, with a genius for music and a love of all aesthetic delights, and with no head for politics or business.

For various reasons, however, he had become convinced that the cipher, which was the chief object of his search, was in the colonel's possession; and he taxed his ingenuity, but for a long time without result, to discover where he kept it. He reasoned that it must be easily accessible; and yet it must be so placed that no one but the colonel would be likely to get track of it. At length he touched a clue, which proved to be the right one.

On a certain day, the colonel, as Johnson had learned, was to attend a meeting of some of the leaders of the Brotherhood: and it was on this day that he entrusted the Englishman with the note to his wife, requiring her to bring him his cigarette case. This note Johnson carried to the chief of the English secret service in New York, and there opened it. Its purport seemed so odd, that they decided to follow up the hint there given.

But Mrs. Desmond's failure to follow out her husband's instructions brought about a hitch in their plans. The cigarette case appeared to have been lost: where was it? Through Lizzie, Johnson arrived at the conclusion that Mrs. Desmond had given the box away to Hanier. The scene, witnessed by himself and Lizzie, between Hanier and Mrs. Desmond, seemed to give ample motive for such a gift; and the latter's indignant anxiety respecting the whereabouts of the box confirmed the idea that there must be "something in it." Lizzie's subsequent account of the domestic explosion suggested that Mrs. Desmond had confessed her intrigue to her husband; and the midnight expedition to Hanier's was readily explicable as having for its object the recovery of the box. But the murder was an unexpected complication.

Johnson went on to say that, from the circumstances within his knowledge at that juncture, he had been persuaded that the colonel was guilty of Hanier's death. There was sufficient motive in Hanier's complicity with Mrs. Desmond, and in his possible discovery of the contents of the cigarette case; and, again, the colonel had been at Hanier's just before the murder, and might have returned there in time to commit it. Meantime, Johnson described the means whereby he had obtained the cigarette case from the pawnbroker—a transaction in which his knowledge of engraving had stood him in good stead. Having got the cipher, he had transmitted it, through the New York agent, to the English authorities. The cigarette case he had afterward attempted to pawn elsewhere, as the easiest means of getting rid of it. This had led to his arrest by the inspector, who had issued orders to all pawnbrokers to detain anyone who might present himself with the article in question. He then referred briefly to his adventures at the French ball, and to the mistake into which he had been led by Lizzie Pond's having put on the costume which he had prescribed for her mistress.

"Am I to understand," interposed the inspector at this point, "that you are prepared to bring a specific charge of murder against Colonel Desmond?"

"If you had asked me that question yesterday," Johnson replied, "I should have said yes; now I decidedly; but to-day, I still more decidedly say no!"

At this reply, the inspector lifted his eyebrows; while the Shambling Man half started from his chair, and then, restraining himself, fixed his gaze upon the Englishman with such intensity that his eyes seemed to meet across the bridge of his nose and become one.

"Yesterday," continued the narrator, "was the first day since the French ball that I have been able to speak with Miss Lizzie Pond. I attempted to do so once or twice before, but she had refused to see me, because, as I inferred, she was angry with me for having endeavoured to get a hold upon Mrs. Desmond, and for being, myself, not a simple engraver, as I had led her to believe, but an agent of the English secret service. This morning, however, I succeeded in obtaining an interview, the result of which was to put the conduct of the colonel and his wife in quite a new light.

"As you are already aware, Mrs. Desmond is a French lady; but you may not have heard that, at her earlier twentieth year, she made her debut, with great success, on the operatic stage, under the name of Mdlle. Spinalba. After appearing in France and Germany for a year, she accepted an engagement in England, and sang in Covent Garden in London. She was there seen by an Irish-American gentleman, Colonel Desmond, who fell in love with her, and married her. She was wedded under her stage name, which he supposed to be her true one: and she never revealed to him the fact that she was the daughter of a French tradesman, and that her brother was a manufacturer of liquors, by the name of Louis Hanier."

"Her brother!" faltered the Shambling Man, in a husky voice. "I see it all now."

Johnson went on to relate how Colonel Desmond and his wife came to live in New York, and how the latter one day discovered her brother, friendless and in need. She had feared to confess her relationship with him to her husband, who was a man of strong aristocratic prejudices, and who had always supposed his wife to belong to a family of blue blood, though impoverished. But she compromised matters by engaging him as butler in her house; and he might have remained in that position until this day, had not her husband observed a familiarity between Hanier and Mrs. Desmond which he considered unbecoming, and which led to his discharging the butler at short notice. By Mrs. Desmond's assistance, however, he was enabled to rent and stock a small wine shop; and from time to time she gave him sums of money and other presents. At her request, as a measure of precaution, Hanier never informed his wife of the fact that their benefactress was his sister. The colonel, on the other hand, was ignorant that his wife held any communication with Hanier.

So matters went on until the preceding Christmas. Mrs. Desmond had been shopping on Christmas Eve; but, on returning home, found that she had forgotten to purchase anything for her brother. It was too late to go out again, and she was unwilling to leave him without a remembrance on that anniversary. She then remembered having seen a silver cigarette case lying about in her husband's drawers; and, as he did not smoke, and seemed to place no value upon it, she had concluded that he would not notice its absence. With what followed the reader is already acquainted.

The unexpected emotion with which the colonel had received the news of his wife's gift, and his stern and persistent questioning, finally had the effect of causing her to make a complete confession. Her husband's astonishment at learning that Hanier was her brother had been great; but after the first shock of surprise was over he had accepted the situation in much better part than she had feared. He even announced his intention of doing everything in his power to improve Hanier's position, and to help him on in the world; but meanwhile he pointed out the urgent necessity of recovering the cigarette case without delay. As no messenger was to be trusted on such an errand, it was decided that Mrs. Desmond should go in person; and in order to avoid remark the visit should be made after Hanier had closed his shop for the night. These, and other precautions, were due to the colonel's apprehensions that the cigarette case and its contents should be scented by the English emissaries whom he knew to be on the watch in New York. His secrecy was unavailing, as the one man whom he did not think of suspecting followed him and his wife to the wine shop, and drew his own conclusions from what he saw there. The colonel had taken a revolver with him in the hack, as a measure of precaution, and, on receiving the cigarette case, had put it in his pocket, removing his revolver for that purpose; and when he left the hack he had forgotten to take the weapon with him, and it remained on the seat.

The next morning came the news of Hanier's murder. Mrs. Desmond was, naturally, terribly agitated, and at her request Johnson and Lizzie accompanied her to Twenty-sixth-street. But the crowd of people there, and the policeman standing guard at the door, made it evident that they could not view the body without a publicity which might prove detrimental, as it certainly would be useless; and he persuaded her to return home. The next morning he came to her with the cigarette case, his purpose in so doing being, as the inspector had surmised, to put it in a perfectly safe place, where, nevertheless, it would get at a moment's notice. Mrs. Desmond might be necessary. How his expectations were disappointed we know.

It only remained for Johnson, in conclusion, "that the colonel is known not to have left his house after returning to it with his wife just before the murder, on the testimony of Mrs. Desmond and her servants. Besides, with the discovery of his wife's relationship to Hanier, every possible motive for the crime has been disappeared. I have myself had an interview with the colonel, in which I told him the facts about myself which you now know, and it is at his request that I have made this statement here. He will confirm it, if required to do so. Perhaps I ought to say that I have made up my mind to leave the English secret service and take up my residence in New York as an American citizen. I have for some time been particularly interested in Miss Pond, and hope to marry her; and she has made this the condition of accepting my proposals. I have accompanied the narration in detail, but do not perform it; I am now satisfied to retire. And that, gentleman, is all I have to say."

"Well," said the inspector, turning to the Shambling Man, "there is no obstacle in the way of finding out the truth so troublesome as a false scent. Mainly by your exertions, this one has been completely disposed of, and you will have full credit for your energy and ability. The other clue remains; and I am firmly convinced that that will lead us to the solution of this mysterious affair."

RENOVATING THE HANDLES OF TABLE-KNIVES.

Something may be done to improve old ivory handles if these have become discoloured. Cleaning with turpentine is considered useful in such cases; but if the mark proves obstinate it will be necessary to remove the surface and reduce the solid part. To do this, scrape the place with a knife until the stained ivory is cleared away, though of course it is useless to go too deep. If the handle becomes uneven in the process it should be levelled with a file or fine rasp, and then all the marks must be rubbed away by careful use of the finest glass-paper, which will give a smooth surface. It is now ready to receive the final polish. Take a piece of soft rag, dip it in water, and touch it with dry soap (ordinary yellow soap will do), then scrape some whiting on to it, crushing out any lumps; press it down smoothly with the fingers to make it adhere to the soap, and then rub the ivory firmly till a good gloss is obtained. If done has to be dealt with, proceed in the same way, but the whiting must be substituted for the whiting.—From "Work" for December.

A TYPE OF THE SUFFOLK RADICAL AGITATOR.

HOW YAXLEY LABOURERS ARE EDUCATED.

A correspondent writes:—"A week or two back a Yaxley correspondent sent you a resume of the meeting which had been held at Yaxley in connection with the Parish Council and the recreative part which had been taken in the matter by a Mr. C. W. Abbot, who was described as a quack physiologist, especially spoken of in the district as the 'Bump Feeler,' who, it was stated, spent the summer months in touting for business on the beach at seaside resorts, and, it might have been added, the winter months in turning his poor old mother's name, 'Phrenologist,' into the impressive but presumptuous style what he styled a lecture on "Scenes in Wales and Ireland" in the room of the Lion Inn on Monday evening. If there be anything in the theory of the last few weeks, and the local 'bump-feeler' had practised his skill upon his assistance he would have found that unfortunate was very fully developed, or surely they would never have allowed him to pose by this shallow-brained nonentity as they have been during the last few weeks, and thus become the laughing-stock of the district. However, the farce was enacted with all the solemnity which characterises fun fights in the 'Lousy Parish,' with a chairman by the name of John Buckenham, who would have been far better at home studying the Act which he aspires to administer as District and Parish Councillor. After the Chairman had indulged in some incoherent remarks, the empty 'lecturer,' by way of beginning, said that during the past few weeks had reached people here about Wales were as false as the statements he had appeared in a certain newspaper a short time ago. But he knew the country and people, as he had been there, and still would go'—[and seen them on the spot.—ED.] Here is a sample of the utterances of this apostle of 'Free Education,' which will satisfy the curiosity of our readers. The petition against Disestablishment in Wales was signed by old women and little children, said the speaker, so that this is not fair, and the Home Secretary ought to be made acquainted with this. Chorus—Were being built for what purpose he did not know, for the people did not all go to church; they preferres their chapels. The Bishops are a great expense.

They are receiving their £15,000 a-year, and he wondered whether St. Paul got as much, or whether he drove a hansom and carriage. But greeds out of work are always sour. He informed his hearers that when he was a Ritualist he believed in the Establishment, but now he was a changed man. He goes further, and assumes prophetic powers, and says it will come as the song says, by-and-bye. A parson was singled out as getting £2000 a-year, and called upon to disendow the church, his wife, the clerk, and an old woman. Names and places were left to the imagination of the audience, who consisted chiefly of the police and the reporters. Whether this sort of tirade will satisfy the agricultural labourers at the next election is within measureable distance. But what about the abuse poured forth upon employers of labour; upon men on whose purses the ratepayers have to draw supports depend for a livlihood, to sit and be told that the Tories (in other words, their masters) are their enemies, oppressors, and that they are not to be trusted, not even in the smallest matter. And not one had the courage to get up and say, I'll make a stand for my employer. I am one that do not believe him at an enemy, but as a friend. I am glad to work for him and gain an honest living, and it surprises to hear in the distance. So long as masters can find good, solid work they can find good, staunch Englishmen who will not be bought or sold for the proverbial mess of pottage. The proceedings were brought to a close by the audience singing 'He dunno where 'e are' and other classical (?) ditties."

WHICH LEG BROKE DOWN?

Any stool will stand on three legs, but not on two. There must at least be three points to balance.

The three legs a human life stands on are these—blood, brains, and breath. Or, as the doctors put it, the circulation, the nerves, and the respiration. Let one of these three legs fail and we fall.

Yet, unlike the legs of a stool, the three supports of a human life are connected together. When one weakens it weakens the others. If a man's blood is bad his brains and breath will suffer. And so if the fault is with the brains or the breath. They are a kind of Trinity—three phases of one life—one life running in three channels. And how strangely they blend or part.

Listen to this: "If any one knocked at the door," says a woman, "it would startle me and set my heart fluttering and thumping until I could not breathe." Here were the nerves, the blood, and the breath combining to make mischief. What leg of the three weakened first? To find this out we shall have to ask her to tell more of her experience and then draw a conclusion.

We quote from a letter of hers dated August 18th, 1892. We read her words with interest, for we cannot but make her trouble may be our trouble. "It was at Michaelmas of 1890," she says, "that I first felt low, weak, and weary. My mouth tasted bully, and I was oppressed with a gnawing, sinking feeling at the pit of the stomach. I could eat but little, and what I did eat gave me a sense of pain and fullness at the chest and sides. Also I had a great pain at the heart and palpitation, and brought up a nasty sour fluid into my mouth.

"In January of the next year I removed to a house in Thurlow Road, which was damp; I took cold, and my trouble grew worse. At first I had a dreadful cough which gave me no rest night or day, and almost shook me to pieces. The fits of coughing would last for two or three hours at a time, and I would reioch and throw up frothy phlegm until I was sick and exhausted. After a time my breathing became so difficult I had to be propped up in bed, and for hours I would lie gasping for breath. I had night sweats so bad that my linen and pillows were wet in the morning. Owing to the cough and the shortness of breath, I got little or no sleep at night for weeks together and could barely stand or walk about.

"I struggled on as best I could, my neighbours kindly assisting me. I got so nervous that if anyone merely knocked at the door it would set my heart fluttering and thumping until I could not breathe. People said I had consumption, and would never get well. I had lost all faith in doctors and physic, and did not care how soon the end came.

"While in this condition and fast drifting to the grave (in May, 1881), my husband heard of Mother Seigel's Cur

FOOTBALL NOTES.
[By HALF-BACK.]

The Saint Helen's men were again occupying the turf at Portman Road on Saturday, their visitors on this occasion being the Woolwich Rugby Club, who, it may be remembered, paid them a visit last season. Only twelve men, however, put in an appearance, and this, of course, gave the "Saints" a big advantage. The redoubtable "Dick" Powell, of Ipswich Town, was requisitioned for the occasion, and, as might well be expected, did the major part of the three-quarter back work, scoring three of the four tries obtained during the game. After waiting an absurdly long while over the advertised time for starting, the patience of the meagre crowd was rewarded by the kick-off of the football exhibitions of the game soon upon the ground for some time.

Of course, the famous "Dick" was requisitioned upon every possible opportunity, and he did not neglect to take full advantage of the chances, he also displaying being the most attractive feature of the match. With three more men amongst the Woolwich team he would probably have proved the tryaudet business a little more difficult. The place kicking of the "Saints," too, was execrable, in fact, almost childish; the passing was poor in the extreme, and the half-back pair worthless. The one redeeming feature of the Ipswich team's play was the manner in which, as is usually smart, the visitors' three-quarters never seemingly to the least chance. In this department also the visitors shone to the full, their passing being all that could be commendable. I have come to the very reluctant conclusion that the St. Helen's Club is in a very bad way just at present.

"M'Laring" is the title which Colles bestows the Ipswich Town and Framlingham College match on Saturday. The "Stripes" were somewhat poorly represented, being without Ratcliff, Osborrow, and Walford, whose places were filled by Turner, Bright, and Green. The recent rain had rendered the ground very sloppy, and the quality of the play suffered in consequence.

The Town team, this afternoon, should have met the Yarmouth Artillery upon the Portman Road ground. The soldiers, however, have practically being obliged to replay their final tie in the Norfolk Cup with the competition with the NORWICH C.E.Y.M.S., which was drawn and left Harwich and Parkeston, however, have come to the rescue, and will doubtless give the "Stripes" a good game, and one well worth seeing. Walford and Woods will be unable to play this afternoon, and the Town team will probably comprise Cornell, Bailey, Hayward, Turner (capt.), Murrell, Osborrow, Kent, Bright, Turner, and Caleopole.

Three matches took place in the North Suffolk League on Saturday. The two Beccles teams—the Colts and the Caxton—met for the second time, upon the ground of the former. On the first occasion the Collegians made a very creditable draw of the game upon the Caxtonians' ground, but on this occasions they were somewhat overmatched, and the interval the score was one all. However, shortly after the commencement of the College backs became disabled, and this weakness left in the play of the home team, they were not able to close in goal, they won by three goals to one. Leiston obtained their first point in the competition by drawing with Bungay Chancer Street, and Saxmundham and Leiston, the game is reported to have been a good one, and the score, 1—1, would certainly indicate a tough struggle. The remaining match was at Saxmundham, where Kelsale Rovers were doubtless somewhat surprised to find the home men in scratching side. No wonder that when the whistle sounded for the final truce the visitors were beaten by no less than five goals to nil. This is the worst defeat the Halesworth men have experienced in the competition. The revised table to date is given below :—

| | Pld. | Won. | Drn. | Lst. | For. | Agst. | Pts. |

HOUSEHOLD ACCIDENTS.

There are occurring hourly. Either a child is burnt or scalded, its finger cut or bruised, perhaps bitten by a dog, poisoned by drugs, or falls from the hall, a strain, or one of the thousand vexatious troubles cropping up in the home, in the business, the stable, the hunting field, barracks, on ship board, the playground, and in the sporting world—from cycle to steeplechase. It is then that HOMOCEA is invaluable. In all cases where there is a very short time ago pain is allayed and healing begins. Any night baby may have an attack of croup, and just a quarter teaspoonful given internally acts like magic. Rubbing the throat and chest HOMOCEA is useful. Again, what father or mother does not know what it is to be awakened by a child crying with earache or toothache. Fill the ear with HOMOCEA, or rub the gums, and if the tooth is decayed, put HOMOCEA in, and the business is done.

Mr. J. W. C. FEGAN,
Writing from "The Boys' Home," 95, Southwark Street, London, S.E., says :—
"I know no preparation like HOMOCEA for general usefulness in a household. It is the best remedy I have tested it by personal application, and amongst our boys, for all kinds of accidents, it DOES ALL that it is guaranteed to do, and would not be without it here on any account. It is not only a wonderful lubricant, but tranquilises and relieves pain, subdues inflammation and pain almost instantaneously. Personally I cannot express my thankfulness for it, as I have used it for all kinds of ailments during the last eight years here, and at sea, and in Canada. For stiffness, muscular rheumatism, sciatica, sore throat, mosquito bites, &c., it is a real boon, and no praise can be too high for it. No one need be afraid to use it for the most tender part, or even on raw flesh, I have frequently used it for my eyesight with much benefit."

HIPPACEA,
(the veterinary preparation) relieves. For sore backs, broken heels, &c., it is a grand specific.

Remember that HOMOCEA subdues inflammation and allays irritation almost as soon as applied, for it is

"TOUCHES THE SPOT."

All wholesale houses stock HOMOCEA. It can be obtained from Chemists and others at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per bottle, or will be sent by post for 1s. 3d. and 3s. from the wholesale agency, 21, Hamilton Square, Birkenhead.

TOLD BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.

 Districts will be found alphabetically arranged. All Church news usually placed under this heading will be found arranged under the special heading of "Church Notes and News."

ALDEBURGH: BILLIARD HANDICAP.—A successful termination of a billiard handicap took place at Aldeburgh on Monday evening, at the Brudenell Hotel. The handicap, which was arranged by Messrs. Bird and Whilst the massive salad bowl was taken by Mr. Henry Starling.

BECCLES: INVITATION TO A PASTORATE.—On Sunday, at the Congregational Chapel, a requisition was very numerously signed inviting the Rev. W. Hosker, of Caterham, to accept the pastorate of the church.

BECCLES: SEQUEL TO A MISCHIEVOUS ACT.—On Sunday morning the congregation at Beccles parish church was alarmed by an escape of steam from the heating apparatus. Fortunately no harm resulted themselves, but quietude was speedily restored by the simple application of listening of a tap which has been turned on by one of the Sunday School children while playing with it.

BECCLES: VOLUNTEER PRIZE DISTRIBUTION.—The annual prize distribution to members of G and H Companies (Beccles) took place on monday evening. Lieut.-Col. Crowfoot presided over a large gathering. The annual statement, said he was pleased that no non-efficients had been returned, to a great extent owing to the kindness of the employers in letting drillers off one away, often at great inconvenience to themselves. The total number of attendances was 1,200, and the total strength of the corps was 133. Of this number 64 had attended every drill, and 15 others had missed only one drill. An interesting entertainment followed the distribution of prizes.

CHARSFIELD: FAILURE OF A BAKER.—Thomas Wasps, baker, Charsfield (late of Tunstall) again appeared at the Ipswich Bankruptcy Court on Thursday last. His deficiency was £92 12s. 6d., debtor attributing it to bad debts, want through damage of bakehouse, and to loss of a horse. Examination closed.

COMBS: INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT.—On Tuesday a successful concert, arranged by the Rev. F. Girling, took place in Mr. Webb's School in aid of the funds of the Institute. Mr. Girling, the Rev. F. Girling, and Mr. Leadership of Mr. R. J. Vince, took part in the proceedings, which were given by Mrs. Waller, Misses Minnie and Connie Freeman, Mrs. Morris (Ipswich) and W. Fison, Mr. H. W. Turner recited.

Our ancestors primeval in long ages past
In caverns and burrows did dwell,
Nature's garb was their fashion, for clothes they'd no passion;
Much paint was the sign of the swell.
The shoemaker and tailor were not in demand,
Yet the potter his trade did pursue,
For deep underground prying moderns have found
Of pre-historic pots not a few.
With the good housewife then in 10,000 B.C.,
Though primitive all were her ware,
Her principal care was her crockery ware,
Oh! would it were so in these days.
Now, rouse ye, good housewives, example pray take
From your fossil'd ancestors of old,
For your Christmas supplies, before puddings or pies,
Go first where the crockery is sold.
At A. Cornish's Warehouse you're certain to find,
Low priced and in quality best,
Plates, Dishes and Mugs, Knives, Glasses and Jugs,
When you've bought them you'll feel yourselves blest.

| Dec. 17 Sylcham, Farming Stock,

petard. In the desperate effort to set class against class he has effected a result which was totally unexpected. The political instinct of the Englishman with something to lose has, in fact, come to the rescue, and in this fact lies the main importance of the Brigg election. As a rule, by-elections are not held up by the Conservative party as abiding object-lessons for the country, but, coming so soon after the Forfarshire election, the victory, in an essentially Liberal constituency of Lincolnshire, is one which cannot but be considered of the highest importance. What will the Government do? The avowed policy of Lord ROSEBERY has been to stick to office like barnacles, and persist in the attempt to harass all the established interests of the country, and finally to have a flare-up against the Upper House at the fag end of next Session. Lord ROSEBERY'S speeches at Bradford and Glasgow lend unfortunate point to Brigg and Forfarshire. To have come before the country with a new policy of admitted revolutionary tendencies is in itself a circumstance of no ordinary importance. "The "revolution," said Lord ROSEBERY, was "more "important than any that had taken place "for two centuries"; and no sooner had he uttered these words than two Radical constituencies, one in Scotland and one in England, cry, "Hold! enough." Never was an egg more completely crushed than the Prime Minister's new party offspring at its birth. The Cabinet may cling to office and talk big about the programme for next Session, but the verdict of the "predominant partner" will reverberate through the constituencies for many a long day. It is like a bad dream, but a real one, which renders absolutely ludicrous the proposed resolution against the House of Lords which was to have been proposed with such pomp and ceremony in the House of Commons. The startling events of the past month may have far-reaching effects upon the political situation. The Opposition now more than ever represent the true feeling of the country, and it will meet Parliament with a sensation of triumph which will be disconcerting to the Government will find it very hard to discount. The tactics which Mr. BALFOUR announced at Nottingham last week have been amply endorsed by the Brigg electors, and it will be the duty of the leader of the Opposition to exhaust all the forms of the House to extort from the Government some practical idea of what their policy is with regard to the House of Lords, and to bring them as rapidly as may be to the bar of public opinion on that policy. There is double cause for division in the ranks of the Liberal party, and they may cling like criminals to the sanctuary of the Irish majority in the House. But this can only be interpreted by the country as an impotent confession of weakness and guilt, and the result will be a heavier disaster in the last resort.

The third act of the Panama Canal scandal has closed with a melancholy epilogue. The news of the death of M. FERDINAND DE LESSEPS, who was once hailed by his fellow-countrymen as "Le Grand Français," has just been published. His early career is one of the most remarkable examples of difficulties overcome by indomitable perseverance and inexhaustible fertility of resource ever recorded in the annals of France. When he conceived the idea of joining the Mediterranean with the Red Sea many of the shining lights of science pronounced the canal to be impossible, just as many of their predecessors had denied the possibility of travelling at the rate of fifteen miles an hour by railroad or crossing the Atlantic by steam. From the most remote times attention has been directed to a canal from the Nile to the Red Sea, but never without the shocks dug directly from sea to sea. The Red Sea and the Mediterranean having been assumed to be on a different level till their equality was established by M. DE LESSEPS. This supposed difference of level and the liability of the entrance to be choked by sand were the two capital objections to his scheme, and they were overcome by an amount of patient endurance that deserves to be called heroic. Of course he had to contend with obstacles, how long can the Government hold together? Even Lord Rosebery's last grand card, laid down with such a tremendous and triumphant thump, has failed him. England is not going to be bullied, and Ireland is not going to be cajoled, loyal Scotland, is deserting the cause. It is said that the Government intends on the reassembling of Parliament to ask the House of Commons to pass some undefined resolution which is to be carried "nem con" in its senses—or to its knees, we are not sure which. Then some revolutionary measures are to be introduced, passed through the House of Commons, and hurled at the heads of the Lords. If they refuse to "accept" them, or "ratify" them, then is to come the appeal to the final tribunal. Not that the House of Lords has the right to force a dissolution—Oh dear, no!—but it is necessary that the supremacy of the Lower Chamber should be thoroughly secured. If by a large majority, say one of the leaders of the Separatist party, the country returns us to power, the House of Lords dare not resist. A big "if" from a Radical. Of course this declaration gives away their case, which is that the House of Lords invariably resists the will of the nation.

That is the reason they give for desiring its abolition. But if they are so confident of a majority resisting, why did not they appeal to the country when the rejection of the Home Rule Bill was still fresh in the memory of the people, and with Mr. Gladstone's great personality to back them? The reason is obvious enough. They themselves assert that they wished to fill up the cup of the Lords' iniquities. They have filled their own cup to overflowing, and all the wriggling and twisting of which they are capable will not empty it of its dregs. Nothing is secure while the party of repine and plunder is in power. Institutions upon which England has depended for centuries in the past are liable at any moment to be destroyed. The most sacred rights of property at any time be infringed. The nation's prosperity and greatness hang upon a slender thread. Abroad it is the same. Treaties are liable to be broken; our most loyal allies may be deserted and betrayed; the interests of great dependencies may be sacrificed for the sake of a few paltry votes at home; foreign States may treat Englishmen in the most oppressive manner, and the Government remain silent. In short, no country but the Foreign Office, with its timid and vacillating Ministry has interests abroad are never secure. For almost every reason that can be conceived, it is time that the day of reckoning should come; and when it does come the Unionist party will be prepared and the constituencies will be ready.

If the statement which a Continental geologist has made in a letter to Dr. J. E. Taylor, of Ipswich, be borne out there is no cause to doubt it—a prospective discovery of coal on the Continent is far more appreciated than in Suffolk. Professor Dollfus states that a similar enterprise to that on the banks of the Stour is being conducted in a northern part of France; and as enthusiastic are the Frenchmen in the locality where the trials are to be made that they have raised sufficient money for six borings of a depth of 12,000 feet each. Suffolk landowners scarcely viewed the project with so much favour.

Lowestoft's confidence.

The Bishop of London, in the Church Congress, narrated an experience he had undergone while speaking on the subject of self-sacrifice at a temperance meeting. A woman at the back of the Hall suddenly got up and called out, "Have you ever stood over the washing tub all day? If you've done that, you would know something about it, and you'd better do something like that before you talk about something you don't understand." He said he would not deny that he had felt rebuked, and he admitted that those who earned their bread by the sweat of their brow lay under a greater temptation than those who earned it by their brains.

How the Lecturer was saved.

To gain the entire confidence of a constituency is a good fortune which the majority of Parliamentary candidates dare not hope for, but many succeed in attaining their object. Mr. H. S. Foster, M.P. for Lowestoft, would appear to be one of the favoured few. Sheriff Samuel, of London, in toasting Mr. Foster's health as the new Master of the Worshipful Company of Makers of Playing Cards, at a dinner evening, observed that, from his own knowledge, he knew that no single member of Parliament in the United Kingdom possessed a safer seat, or was more thoroughly ensconced in the hearts of his constituents, than Mr. Foster, and in having gained the confidence of the electors of the Lowestoft Division of Suffolk he might claim to have attained an eminence that no man could ever hold unless he thoroughly deserved it.

Felixstowe Affairs.

It seems that the lecturer's duty was to travel over the division with a van, and at each village to illustrate his lecture by means of an oxy-hydrogen lantern. In the village in which the incident took place it would seem that the populace had been inflamed against Conservatism by the type of man at Yaxley, and as the lecturer came into the place he was generally hissed and some cheered. He was greeted with the cry, "Stirling token of dislike," murmured the lecturer, but these are quite trivial events in the experiences of van-lecturers, and he proceeded to the place arranged for his meeting. Unfortunately for him, the Conservative party—unlike the Radicals—decidedly object to packing the front rows of their meetings with burly ruffians to defend the speakers on platforms from being assailed. Unfortunately, did we say? Well, perhaps not. Well, it might have been unfortunate had it not been for his selfpossession. To cut a long story short, the lecture began, and there was a big crowd in the room, but the silence was ominous. Picture after picture was given, and beyond a few hisses at the end of the lecture and others, there was tolerable peace. The lecturer began to breathe more freely as the evening progressed in comparative peace, but the storm burst on a representation of Lord Salisbury. "Smash the picture!" yelled a voice of the audience with electrifying suddenness. Up rose a large portion of the audience, and at once rushed towards the lantern. Regardless of danger the lecturer turned his back on the crowd and, seized a bottle instantly of gas to unite. The result was a loud sizzling noise. On this the lecturer cried out "Save yourselves! The lamp is going to burst." He was not mistaken in his estimate of the valour of his audience, for immediately there was a stampede for the door. A large number waited patiently outside, and were at length rewarded by seeing the lecturer flee down the hill with the lantern in his arms, and they did not cease their pursuit until ahead of the lamp bursting. The lecturer packed up and drove away the same night. As he left the meeting-house the van was pelted with stones, and the windows of the van were smashed.

Ipswich Journalistic "Bulls."

An Ipswich gentleman who was in the Brigg division throughout the recent campaign informs us that the greatest possible party spirit was exhibited up to the day of polling. To such a pitch did the excitement rise that in Brigg churches and chapels and agents on either side were followed by enthusiasts of the opposite colours and hissed from one place to another. Several Conservative meetings were stormed, and in this connection we forsee fresh facts in a story which is well worth reproducing. The result, instead of being certainly amusing, might have been serious had not the principal gentleman in question been possessed of a considerable amount of common sense and a fund of humour, but political coolness. It is in the knowledge of this political gentleman, and of great self-possession, but even they cannot always avert an organised rush having with its object the throwing of the agent out of the window. The general reader may smile, but sometimes it is enough to print, but to experience the operation or even attempted operation, is calculated to make the bravest quail. This form of amusement is very common in the North, particularly in the Scotch districts of Aberdeenshire and Forfarshire, but it is by no means confined to the rugged inhabitants of these wild parts, for, according to our informant, a lecturer in charge of a Beaconsfield van, who appeared one night at a village near Scunthorpe, only saved himself from being thrown through a window and his lantern smashed by the quickness of his wit.

Felixstowe Affairs.

The Felixstowe Local Board having virtually snubbed the newly-formed Ratepayers' Association for Whole-some Water Supply by declining to defer the letting of the contracts for the new sewerage works, the Association appear to be bent on revenge. This week the ratepayers mustered in strong force and signified their displeasure by making a disorderly demonstration in the Town Hall and pelting themselves with missiles. The gentlemen to the new District Council in opposition to their old representatives on the new defunct Local Board. Ratepayers' Associations can be of much service to local authorities if the gentlemen who form them understand that they are merely appear to be acting in the best interests of their rapidly growing town by frustrating or delaying the sewerage scheme. However, the election will show whether the few, or the whole, approves of the old mandarin's conduct in the matter.

Ipswich Journalistic "Bulls."

An Ipswich daily contemporary has evidently added a humorist to its staff, or, at least, we should imagine so from the way in which some of its news items have been worded of late.

The other day we read that a certain highly respected agriculturist, whose mortal remains were laid in their last resting-place on Saturday, "was one of six fine Scotchmen who came south in 1852 to be in attendance at the exhibition in 1851." Still more recently the descriptive reporter of the staff was distinguishing himself, and in describing the shocking cruelty to which a horse had been subjected, remarked upon the "poor creature's" terrible sufferings. The readers of our contemporary's readers would be shocked to learn that quadrupeds had suddenly become associated with the human family.

A tribute to Mr. Bourke.

Mr. Stanley Boulter, who had been speaking on behalf of the Conservative party in the Brigg division, in addressing the meeting at which the result was announced spoke of the Conservative victory in the following terms:—"I am proud that the result which has been obtained mainly by the splendid organisation which was in the hands of Mr. Bourke, the Conservative agent for the Eastern Counties, assisted by a small army of joint-secretaries and enthusiastic workers. Thirty-eight representatives of Ireland were sent into the division, who were deputed by the working men of Belfast to represent their intense aversion to Home Rule. Most of these representatives did yeoman service work upon the platform, and the remainder did equally efficient service in canvassing from house to house. The platform speakers have all had great influence with the electors, notably Mr. T. W. Russell, M.P., who made a special force which turned the election was the great influence the social proposals lately put forward by Mr. Chamberlain had upon the electors. The proposal to "mend or end" the House of Lords had not only considered as a serious proposition by the electors.

Testimonial to Col. Alderson.

The announcement recently made in this column that a testimonial to Col. Alderson—a gentleman who has rendered signal service to the Ipswich Race Committee, and is a most popular figure in the hunting field—has been a cause for gratification on the part of the Colonel's numerous friends. The subscribers to the proposed testimonial met at the Great White Horse Hotel, Ipswich, on Tuesday last, when it was decided that the total amount subscribed amounted to the handsome sum of £70 19s. 6d., the numerous subscribers being headed by the High Sheriff of Suffolk, the Duke of Hamilton, Lord Stradbroke, and other equally well-known county gentlemen. It was subsequently left in the hands of a large and valuable silver gilt cup, together with the subscribers' signatures handsomely bound, and will be presented on New Year's afternoon.

The Situation.

The situation seems a grave one for the Radical party. With the country hostile, as is proved by the by-elections which it has to fight—and there are these section and group in the House of Commons loudly demanding that its particular pet measure shall be placed in the front rank of the Bills to be brought forward in the coming Session—the Irish party in open opposition facing them at every turn; with a leader who does not appear to know his own mind for two days together, and who often has to make a speech specially to explain away a previous speech of his delivered on the previous day, how long can the Government hold together? Even Lord Rosebery's last grand card, laid down with such a tremendous and triumphant thump, has failed him. England is not going to be bullied, and Ireland is not going to be cajoled, loyal Scotland, is deserting the cause. It is said that the Government intends on the reassembling of Parliament to ask the House of Commons to pass some undefined resolution which is to be carried "nem con" in its senses—or to its knees, we are not sure which. Then some revolutionary measures are to be introduced, passed through the House of Commons, and hurled at the heads of the Lords. If they refuse to "accept" them, or "ratify" them, then is to come the appeal to the final tribunal. Not that the House of Lords has the right to force a dissolution—Oh dear, no!—but it is necessary that the supremacy of the Lower Chamber should be thoroughly secured. If by a large majority, say one of the leaders of the Separatist party, the country returns us to power, the House of Lords dare not resist. A big "if" from a Radical. Of course this declaration gives away their case, which is that the House of Lords invariably resists the will of the nation.

The filling of the cup.

That is the reason they give for desiring its abolition. But if they are so confident of a majority resisting, why did not they appeal to the country when the rejection of the Home Rule Bill was still fresh in the memory of the people, and with Mr. Gladstone's great personality to back them? The reason is obvious enough. They themselves assert that they wished to fill up the cup of the Lords' iniquities. They have filled their own cup to overflowing, and all the wriggling and twisting of which they are capable will not empty it of its dregs. Nothing is secure while the party of repine and plunder is in power. Institutions upon which England has depended for centuries in the past are liable at any moment to be destroyed. The most sacred rights of property at any time be infringed. The nation's prosperity and greatness hang upon a slender thread. Abroad it is the same. Treaties are liable to be broken; our most loyal allies may be deserted and betrayed; the interests of great dependencies may be sacrificed for the sake of a few paltry votes at home; foreign States may treat Englishmen in the most oppressive manner, and the Government remain silent. In short, no country but the Foreign Office, with its timid and vacillating Ministry has interests abroad are never secure. For almost every reason that can be conceived, it is time that the day of reckoning should come; and when it does come the Unionist party will be prepared and the constituencies will be ready.

Mr. Arch and the Labourers.

The hero of the mangel—we use the term advisedly, and not in the sense of the application by Mr. Joseph Arch in his speech at Norwich—

20 extracts in our columns to-day—seems to have had an unpleasant reception in the Brigg division, and we shrewdly suspect that although Mr. Arch declared at the New Bucklesham meeting that he was quite independent of the votes of his constituents, and that he would go back to Parliament with a larger majority than ever—how he can accomplish this we don't know, but then what are the limits to Mr. Joseph Arch's accomplishments?—that he was a Radical hunter for votes is fast declining. At Brigg he was challenged by Mr. A. L. Edwards to discuss with him the question of his (Mr. Arch's) balance-sheets. He refused to be drawn out in public, despite the fact that the hall in which Mr. Edwards was speaking was only about 100 yards away. Several of his supporters called, and reminded him of Mr. Edwards's public challenge, but Mr. Arch refused point blank to budge. The greatest astonishment prevailed amongst his ardent supporters, that he should refuse to avail himself of such an opportunity to give the lie direct to the serious charges of extravagance and mismanagement which lay in which large sums of money have been expended. The opportunity of clearing himself was an exceptional one, for there were reporters present from all the powerful metropolitan and provincial papers. But his behaviour under the circumstances, to say the least of it, destroyed the confidence of his supporters, and we believe that it was understood that Sir Chas. Dalrymple, M.P. would in all probability, be invited to stand, the suggested being a Wednesday after the assembling of Parliament on February 5th. The President gave a farewell address.

Mr. J. J. Dunne related his experiences in the Brigg election.

GATHERING OF IPSWICH DOCKERS

PRESENTATION TO THE REV. J. POWELL.

The Co-operative Hall presented a striking scene on Tuesday evening, when the friends of Ipswich and their wives—500 in all—spent four long and happy hours together, at the invitation of the Rector of St. Clement's (the Rev. J. Powell). The pleasure of the evening consisted of a capital tea and concert, the latter being presided over by Mr. Ellis Ling, the well-known Ladies' Band, conducted by Miss M. C. Nunn. The ladies providing "trays" and superintending at the tables were Mrs. Ellis Ling, Mrs. Powell, Lady Evelyn Cobbold, Mrs. J. P. Cobbold, Mrs. Henry Schreiber, Mrs. N. Cobbold, Mrs. W. Alexander, Mrs. W. Paul, Mrs. C. Nunn, Mrs. Percy Richard, Mrs. Rox. Rox. Rox. Ray, Mrs. Fish, Mrs. E. Turner, Mrs. E. Ransome, Mrs. E. Ransome, jun., Mrs. G. H. Jefferies, Miss Tomline, Miss Ellis Ellington, Miss Coulcher, Mrs. Sizer, Mrs. Bales, Mrs. Bastoft, Mrs. Lofthouse, Miss Durrant, Miss Ellis, Miss Smith, Miss Christopherson, Mrs. White Jervis, Mrs. Bishop, Mrs. Eisdell, Mrs. Tempest, Miss Moore, Mrs. S. M. Miller, Miss Miller, Miss Ransome, &c., &c. Votes of thanks were cleared, and a capital programme of music, recitations, &c., was gone through. After an instrumental solo by Mr. W. Dodd, a duet for violins was played by Master A. Powell and Miss M. C. Nunn. Miss Dunn then gave a recitation, and Mess

THE BRIGG ELECTION.

A CRITICAL SURVEY.

[BY CAPTAIN R. G. PRETYMAN.]

Captain Pretyman writes us from Castle Bromwich, under date December 13th, as follows:—"I think perhaps a few words from me as regarding the Brigg election may be of interest to your readers. My Lincolnshire home is situated in the Brigg Division, and as soon as possible after the announcement of Mr. Waldy's resignation I hastened there to give Mr. Richardson all the help in my power.

The Brigg Division consists of about 20 parishes, and, like the Woodbridge Division, has a large town (Gainsboro') within its borders and a number of ownerships; but Grimsby only contains some 400 voters, while Ipswich has over 1,000. Of the 20 parishes in the Division some thirteen or fourteen are large villages or small towns with populations of from 1,000 to 500 each. Three of these, Barton, Brigg, and all the smaller villages, are entirely dependent upon agriculture, but two or three, notably Scunthorpe and Frodingham, are of recent growth, and their population is engaged in mining and smelting of the ironstone found in that district. Barton is a great centre of brickmaking, and New Holland and Barnetby, also considerable places, are principally inhabited by railway men. Thus it would be difficult to find a more thoroughly representative constituency, although, of course, the agricultural interest is distinctly the predominating one.

In the centre of the Division lies the great Brocklesby property of the Earl of Yarborough. Lord Yarborough lives entirely at Brocklesby, and both he and Lady Yarborough are very popular among their numerous tenants and those whom they employ. With the exception of Brocklesby there are scarcely any country gentlemen's houses in the Division and occupied by their owners, so the bad times have compelled most of the smaller squires to shut up their houses.

Since 1885 the Division has invariably returned a Liberal or a Radical to Parliament, and the present election shows a loss to the Radicals of 1,300 votes since 1885, and a gain of exactly the same number to the Conservatives.

When I left Brigg, a fortnight before the election, meetings were already being held in every district, and the voters were attending them with praiseworthy diligence, and honestly doing their utmost to judge which was the most deserving of their support.

To attempt to describe my own share in the great battle, I will only say that I addressed either one or two meetings nightly, and rode over upon 200 miles in the dark, mostly through the rain, for a fortnight, and I have not able to do two times as much the result would have been an ample reward.

Never was there a contrast in which purely local matters have less place. The interest of the electors seemed to be entirely centred upon the great questions of the House of Lords, agricultural depression, the Poor-law, the Budget, the Church, Local Option, and Home Rule for Ireland, and it was upon those questions that their discussion was given.

Throughout the contest a fair and friendly hearing was given to both sides, except at one meeting at Caistor, when an organised band of Radical roughs succeeded in breaking up a Unionist meeting.

It was a very great surprise to me to discover that the old blind faith in Radical promises which has carried so many elections and caused so much bitter disappointment, was no longer the prevalent belief in the minds of the agricultural labourers. Wages in Lincolnshire, as in Suffolk, are lower than for years past, and although many labourers are grateful for Parish Councils, they do not see how that measure is to restore prosperity to agriculture, or to cause many more labourers to be employed. On the other hand, they were by no means prepared to vote for the Conservatives party without a thorough understanding of the grounds upon which we claimed their support, and the difficulties that the tendency of modern Radicalism is to drive trade and prosperity from the country.

The efforts of Unionist speakers were entirely directed to this end, and the large audiences they were able to lay before their audiences were fortunately sufficient to turn the balance in the right direction.

As the day of poll drew near it became evident that the fight must be a close one, and both sides exerted themselves to the utmost.

The Radicals now attribute their defeat to the importation of so many Unionist speakers, but two or three days before the poll they boasted that there were 30 Radical "big guns" in the Division, and that they had in all no less than 120 speakers and organizers at work, whereas our side had only 90. Perhaps they may include some of their 120 among our own adherents, as we certainly had the most numerous and the largest of the labourers at the advanced doctrines and strong language of some of the Socialistic Radical speakers of both sexes who invaded the Division. The night before the poll one of these conservative meetings were held, and probably the Radicals had nearly as many present. After the pollbe was over, both sides claimed to have won, and the Radicals were the more confident of the two.

I was present at the counting of the votes, which was most exciting. Mr. Richardson began to form a little ahead from the first, and never lost the lead, although there were a few anxious moments. When the result was announced as a majority of 77 in favour of Mr. Richardson, the cheering was so loud and continuous that the High Sheriff could hardly declare the numbers. A rather unpleasant incident was the hustling of the Rev. W. Savory, who was chairman of the Brigg Board of Guardians, and took an active part in the election upon the Radical side, and who made himself very unpopular by making personal attacks upon Lord Yarborough and Mr. Richardson during the course of the election. Three days before the election was declared, Mr. Savory was summoned by the Government with the Crown living of Healey, in Yorkshire. This was looked upon by the electors as a reward for his exertions in the Radical cause, and much resented by these. On the declaration of the poll he found himself in the street he was attacked by the crowd and escaped with some difficulty through a window. Mr. Richardson was drawn in triumph through the streets of Brigg, and in the evening there was the most enthusiastically crowded at every village through which he passed.

The Radical press account for their defeat by the defection of the Irish Nationalist supporters, and declare that the labourers are still with them. Never did I hear a greater mistake. Had the writer of this table accompanied me home after the poll, and had he seen the happy faces of the labourers passed on the road—had he seen the hats and caps flung into the air as they saw the carriage pass, he might, perhaps, have thought differently. What the labourers think was really well summed up by one of them who said to me on the Saturday night, "Well, Sir, they can't give us the money if they don't get it," and he added almost immediately, "We've got to pull together if we're to get a living at all." Another labourer was heard to say, "Having a school where he had been listening to a Radical parson, I'll be glad to see the road we shall soon have wages down to eighteenpence a day." No! Mr. Radical correspondent! The labourer knows a little more than he did nine years ago, and if I mistake not he will know a little more in the future of fewer members of your party at the next General Election from our agricultural constituencies. One lesson the Radicals may take to heart from this and one or two other elections. In the moment of unexpected defeat, one of their party exclaimed in disgust with the confession that the labourers had let them down, and that their votes did not in any way correspond to their promises. They have yet to discover that the labourer has not for the last nine years been more pleasant than the so-called tyranny of the parson and the squire, and when badgered about his vote is quite capable of applying to the Radicals the principles they seem so careful to instil into him in this.

In conclusion, I will only say that the good feeling engendered between employer and employed by Mr. Richardson's victory is almost beyond belief. It must be seen to be realised. Everything points to our keeping the seat at the General Election by a very increased majority, and if the extraordinary comparison made by Lord Rosebery last night at Devonport may be accepted, viz., that numbers are the wealth, almost all the Poers, almost all the local interests, and almost all the men of education in the country are against the Radical party, Brigg will not be the only election we are likely to win. When our own turn comes in Suffolk—and may it be soon—I think we can give as much on account of ourselves as our friends further north.

P.S.—I have just seen your last Saturday's issue, and must beg entirely to disagree with the two paragraphs in the Brigg letter. The statement that the electors of Brocklesby, Limber and Scawby are overwhelming is not at all borne out by fact, and I have the best reasons for believing the contrary to be the case. I must also strongly protest against your correspondent's statement that the Liberal Party has been financed by Levington. I wish I were as confident of support in all other parishes of the Division as I am of these. I do not think it is in good taste to be constantly holding up before people the benefits they derive from their landlords. The whole scheme of the Brigg election was engineered by

AGRICULTURAL LETTER.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

In my last letter I touched briefly on the subject of poultry farming as being an industry which might, under carefully management, prove an auxiliary medium to the farmer in meeting his financial difficulties. I was certainly both gratified and agreeably surprised in looking through the report of the Royal Commission of Agriculture, treating of farming in the Heathfield District of Sussex. Gratified to find my ideas as to poultry being made to pay, confirmed and acknowledged to be a fact; agreeably surprised to hear that, although we in this part of the world fail to make an agricultural business profitable, that in the locality referred to the state of things appears otherwise.

To Mr. Rew we are indebted for a very lucid description of the mode by which this industry is carried on. It appears to be divided into two branches, that of the rearer and that of the fattener, and is in only comparatively few instances that these two departments are combined.

The rearer's business is to breed and bring up the chickens until they are three or four months old, when he disposes of them to the fattener at prices ranging from 1s. 8d. to 3s. 6d.; each price varying as to the time they are ready for fattening, the early birds, as a rule, fetching the highest price. It is the fattener's aim to place them in the market at the shortest time possible, a process which usually takes three or four weeks, at the end of which time they bring home from 3s. to 6s. 6d. each.

To arrive at this early state of maturity, it stands to reason, artificial means must be resorted to, and the system of cramming is brought into force after the birds have been allowed to enjoy life about a fortnight in their new home.

Eight thousand chickens reared on 200 acres gives some idea as to the enormous scale on which this business is worked, and will surely considerably astonish many of our East Anglian farmers, who have, as a rule, scant belief in the profits of the poultry yard. But when the report soon on to say that over a million fat fowls were despatched from Heathfield and Uckfield Stations last year, a demand to be worth from £165,000 to £175,000, it fairly makes one think and think again as to what our old farm hens may be educated up to.

Certainly poultry require a great deal of personal supervision, and where such vast numbers are kept strict cleanliness and regular feeding must be adhered to.

Also the question of the correct strain of fowls to keep is alone a point over which much thought and judgment must be exercised.

Taken as a whole, the meetings hold to elect the Parish Councils passed off without much unpleasantness, although, as was to be expected, we hear of elections coming off in some parishes, and, in a few places, arousing the bitter feelings which set man at variance with their neighbours, and once aroused are so difficult to suppress.

What good these Parish Councils are going to do agriculture is a question constantly being asked, and as yet a favourable reply is not at all soon to be forthcoming. It is certain the public are quite alive to the fact that, for quieting a man, there is nothing like putting him into office. As one reads of the rural districts as described by Mr. Rew, of the number of "public" men to a population of 4s. 1½d. per member. The total amount of the A.O.F.'s superannuation fund at the beginning of 1893 was £67 5s. 1d., at the end of the year £123 3s. 7d.

A Norfolk contemporary has some very complimentary remarks to make concerning the Ipswich district of the Manchester Unity, and the recent opening of the "Orford White" Lodge in Bramford Road. "If Ipswich can do this it would seem quite itself to accommodate suburban districts, why not Norwich?"

We understand that county conferences for both the A.O.F. and the Manchester Unity are contemplated for East Anglia. Lance, Cheshire, Shropshire, Staffordshire, Derbyshire, Yorkshire, and Kent have their conferences in connection with the M.U.O.O.F., and similar gatherings of the A.O.F. are known as the Yorkshire Federation, Midland Federation, Northern Counties' Federation, and Scottish Federation. Most of these bodies meet twice a year, the one being the annual meeting and those of the A.M.C. or H.C.M., they are generally productive of valuable suggestions and interchange of ideas which, if carried out in the other counties would, we feel sure, serve an equally good purpose.

A familiar figure in the ranks of Scottish Oddfellowship has been removed by death. This was Mr. Geo. Findlay, of the "St. Marnock" Lodge, Kilmarnock, who was installed in the year 1844, and had been in office under the title of Secretary for fifty-one years. Steady, plodding and unambitious, he was guardian of his lodge for no less a period than 43 years, during which time its progress from the days of small initiations, steady

NOTICE.

Foreshore and Bed of Bawdsey Haven at Felixstowe Ferry.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that an application has been received by the Board of Trade (to whom by The Crown Lands Act 1888, the management of the rights and interests of the Crown in the foreshores of the United Kingdom has been transferred) from the Felixstowe Golf Club, for permission to construct protective works against encroachments by the Sea on the West side of Bawdsey Haven close to the Coast Guard Station, and also near the Old Battery, near Eastend Farm.

All Persons interested are to take notice that, 21 days after this date, the Board of Trade will proceed to consider the application, and in the meantime they will receive any objections which may be made thereto.

(Signed) C. CECIL TREVOR, Assistant Secretary.

Board of Trade,
Harbour Department,

FIFTEEN REASONS

WHY YOU SHOULD TAKE OUT

A SICKNESS POLICY

WITH ALBERT RANSON.

1. BECAUSE to provide against sickness is to prove yourself thrifty.
2. BECAUSE thrift is essential to a true morality.
3. BECAUSE by staking your good health against the chances of illness you are speculating
4. BECAUSE speculation is opposed to both thrift and morality.
5. BECAUSE although you may have been healthy in the past it is the future that you have to provide for.
6. BECAUSE sickness will come, and will bring with it greatly increased expenditure, and probably loss or depreciation of income.
7. BECAUSE Sickness Insurance is the only means of providing a certain and adequate income during sickness.
8. BECAUSE your savings for times of sickness may thus be regular and adequate, and the provision ample.
9. BECAUSE if you have a family they will share its advantages with you.
10. BECAUSE if you have no family it is still a good provision for yourself.
11. BECAUSE you cannot do for yourself what can be done by combination with others.
12. BECAUSE you cannot afford to be ill, and therefore you cannot afford to be uninsured against sickness.
13. BECAUSE the premiums charged are as low as is compatible with safety.
14. BECAUSE all claims are promptly and liberally met.
15. BECAUSE the security is undoubted and indisputable.
